Although their various doctrines differed in many respects, two common Gnostic themes exist: first, an oriental Persian dualism, according to which the two realms of Good and Evil, Light and Darkness, order and chaos are viewed as independent battling principles; and second, the conviction that this material world is utterly evil, so that man can be saved only by attaining the gnosis of the higher realm. Two common themes among Shinkai's films, including The Garden of Words are subtle romances and lingering emotions.
